First War shaped us

IT WAS the war that changed the world, and the battle that helped to shape the Australian fighting spirit.

As Australia prepares to celebrate the centenary of the Anzac Cove landings at Gallipoli next year, and the nation's subsequent involvement in the First World War on the Western Front, The Morning Bulletin will bring you special coverage marking key milestones in the war leading up to the fateful campaign.

Our Centenary Milestones series starts on Monday with Austria-Hungary's declaration of war against Serbia, the event that sparked a chain of war declarations to bring much of Europe into war with one another and to draw fledgling federation

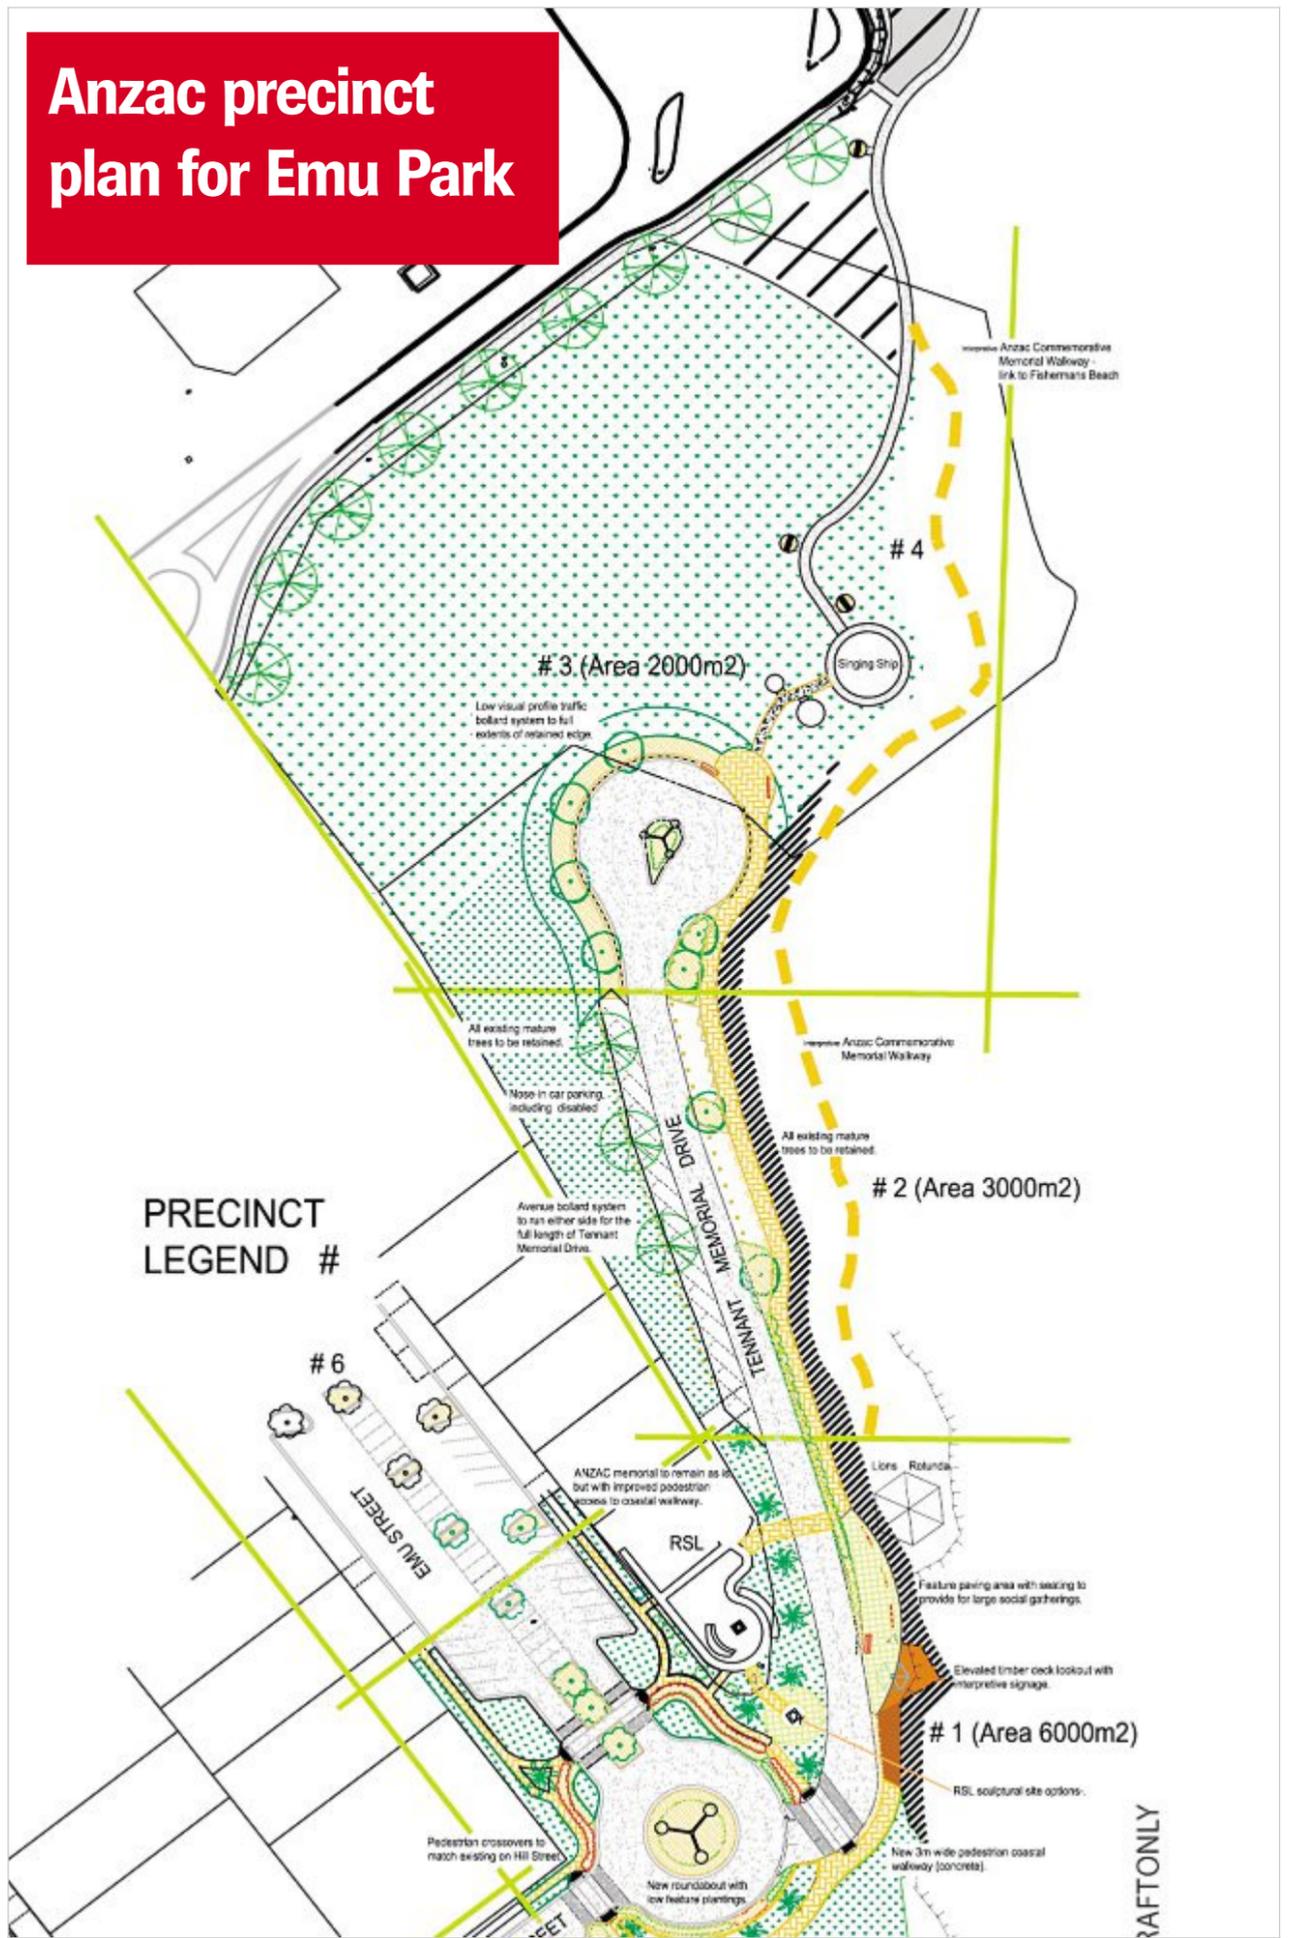

Australia into the conflict to defend its "Mother Country".

On Tuesday, we will carry a special NiE page highlighting some of the important facts of the First World War, a reminder that while some of the events may have fallen out of living memory, remembrance remains.

The Centenary Milestones series will then follow landmark events during the war years.

Brush up on your history by following our commemorative coverage, which will include stories from families in the Central Queensland region with connections to the First World War and subsequent conflicts, carrying the nation's Anzac spirit with them all the while.
